The best way in which innovation changes our lives is by enabling people to ① cooperate with each other. The main theme of human history is that we become steadily more specialized in what we produce, and steadily more diversified in what we consume: we move away from ② insecure self-sufficiency to stable mutual interdependence. By concentrating on serving other people's needs for forty hours a week - which we call a job - you can spend the other seventy-two hours ③ enjoying the services provided to you by other people. With the development of electronic technology, even if you work for a fraction of a second, you can use electronic products for long. That is, innovation has made it possible to work for ④ hours in order to be able to afford to turn on an electric lamp for an hour. Thanks to the innovation, now you have ⑤ sufficient amount of light that would have required a whole day's work if you had to make it yourself.

Generalization without specific examples that humanize writing is boring to the listener and to the reader. Who wants to read platitudes all day? Who wants to hear the words great, greater, best, smartest, finest, humanitarian, on and on and on without specific examples? Instead of using these 'nothing words,' leave them out completely and just describe the particulars. There is nothing worse than reading a scene in a novel in which a main character is described up front as heroic or brave or tragic or funny, while thereafter, the writer quickly moves on to something else. That's no good, no good at all. You have to use less one word descriptions and more detailed, engaging descriptions if you want to make something real.

*platitude: 상투적인 말

The famous primatologist Frans de Waal, of Emory University, says humans downplay similarities between us and other animals as a way of @maintaining our spot at the top of our imaginary ladder. Scientists, de Waal points out, can be some of the worst offenders — employing technical language to @distance the other animals from us. They call "kissing" in chimps "mouth-to-mouth contact"; they call "friends" between primates "favorite affiliation partners"; they interpret evidence showing that crows and chimps can make tools as being somehow qualitatively @same from the kind of toolmaking said to define humanity. If an animal can beat us at a cognitive task — like how certain bird species can remember the precise locations of thousands of seeds — they write it off as @instinct. This and so many more tricks of language are what de Waal has termed "linguistic castration." The way we use our tongues to @disempower animals, the way we invent words to maintain our spot at the top.

To find the hidden potential in teams, instead of brainstorming, we're better off shifting to a process called brainwriting. The initial steps are solo.

- (A) By developing and assessing ideas individually before choosing and elaborating them, teams can surface and advance possibilities that might not get attention otherwise.
 (B) You start by asking everyone to generate ideas separately. Next, you pool them and share them anonymously among the group. To preserve independent judgment, each member evaluates them on their own. Only then does the team come together to select and refine the most promising options.
 (C) This brainwriting process makes sure that all ideas are brought to the table and all voices are brought into the conversation. It is especially effective in groups that struggle to achieve collective intelligence.

*anonymously: 익명으로 surface: 드러내다

In this way, they can promote a favorable comparison with similar products or differentiate a product from its competitors.

What do advertising and map-making have in common? (①) Without doubt the best answer is their shared need to communicate a limited version of the truth. (②) An advertisement must create an image that's appealing and a map must present an image that's clear, but neither can meet its goal by telling or showing everything. (③) Ads will cover up or play down negative aspects of the company or service they advertise. (④) Likewise, the map must remove details that would be confusing. (⑤)

Being unbiased means that you have no special interest in the outcome of the experiment.

When reading another scientist's findings, think critically about the experiment. Ask yourself: Were observations recorded during or after the experiment? Do the conclusions make sense? Can the results be repeated? Are the sources of information reliable? (A) You should also ask if the scientist or group conducting the experiment was unbiased. (B) For example, if a drug company pays for an experiment to test how well one of its new products works, there is a special interest involved: The drug company profits if the experiment shows that its product is effective. (C) Therefore, the experiments aren't objective. (D) They might ensure the conclusion is positive and benefits the drug company. (E) When assessing results, think about any biases that may be present!

Recently I was with a client who had spent almost five hours with me. As we were parting for the evening, we reflected on what we had covered that day.

(A) At that point I said, "You really do have to leave now, don't you?" "Yes," he admitted. "I am so sorry. I didn't want to be rude but I have to call London and I only have five minutes!" Here was a case where my client's language and most of his body revealed nothing but positive feelings. (B) Even though our conversation was very collegial, I noticed that my client was holding one leg at a right angle to his body, seemingly wanting to take off on its own. One big difference between science and stage magic is that while magicians hide their mistakes from the audience, in science you make your mistakes in public. You show them off so that everybody can learn from them. This way, you get the advantage of everybody else's experience, and not just your own idiosyncratic path through the space of mistakes. This, by the way, is another reason why we humans are so much smarter than every other species. It is not that our brains are bigger or more powerful, or even that we have the ability to reflect on our own past errors, but that we share the benefits that our individual brains have earned from their individual histories of trial and error.

*idiosyncratic: (개인에게) 특유한

For many people, ability refers to intellectual competence, so they want everything they do to reflect how smart they are – writing a brilliant legal brief, getting the highest grade on a test, writing elegant computer code, saying something exceptionally wise or witty in a conversation. You could also define ability in terms of a particular skill or talent, such as how well one plays the piano, learns a language, or serves a tennis ball. Some people focus on their ability to be attractive, entertaining, up on the latest trends, or to have the newest gadgets. However ability may be defined, a problem occurs when it is the sole determinant of one's self-worth. The performance becomes the only measure of the person; nothing else is taken into account. An outstanding performance means an outstanding person; an average performance means an average person. Period.

This criticism highlights the fact that digital content creators face real barriers to crossing over to the sphere of elite celebrity.

While social media attention is potentially an instrument to achieve ends like elite celebrity, some content creators desire ordinary fame as a social end in itself. (A) Not unlike reality television stars, social media celebrities are often criticized for not having skills and talents associated with traditional, elite celebrity, such as acting or singing ability. (B) However, the criticism also misses the point that the phenomenon of ordinary celebrity reconstructs the meaning of fame. (C) The elite celebrity is symbolized by the metaphor of the star, characterized by mystery and hierarchical distance and associated with naturalized qualities of talent and class. (D) The ordinary celebrity attracts attention through regular and frequent interactions with other ordinary people. (E) Achieving ordinary fame as a social media celebrity is like doing well at a game, because in this sphere, fame is nothing more nor less than relatively high scores on attention scales, the metrics of subscribers, followers, Likes, or clicks built into social media applications.

Interestingly, in nature, the more powerful species have a narrower field of vision. The distinction between predator and prey offers a clarifying example of this. The key feature that distinguishes predator species from prey species isn't the presence of claws or any other feature related to biological weaponry. The key feature is the position of their eyes. Predators evolved with eyes facing forward—which allows for binocular vision that offers accurate depth perception when pursuing prey. Prey, on the other hand, often have eyes facing outward, maximizing peripheral vision, which allows the hunted to detect danger that may be approaching from any angle. Consistent with our place at the top of the food chain, humans have eyes that face forward. We have the ability to gauge depth and pursue our goals, but _____.

- ① we lost our precious tool for survival, love
② we can also miss important action on our periphery
③ we can also have other ability to cooperate with others
④ we gave up instinctive movements for our survival
⑤ we lost an invaluable value of sharing things with our neighbors

Since a great deal of day-to-day academic work is boring and repetitive, you need to _____. A mathematician sharpens her pencils, works on a proof, tries a few approaches, gets nowhere, and finishes for the day. A writer sits down at his desk, produces a few hundred words, decides they are no good, throws them in the bin, and hopes for better inspiration tomorrow. To produce something worthwhile—if it ever happens—may require years of such fruitless labor. The Nobel Prize-winning biologist Peter Medawar said that about four-fifths of his time in science was wasted, adding sadly that "nearly all scientific research leads nowhere." What kept all of these people going when things were going badly was their passion for their subject. Without such passion, they would have achieved nothing.

* proof: (수학) 증명

- ② be well motivated to keep doing it
- ③ change the topic of your study frequently

People engage in typical patterns of interaction based on the relationship between their roles and the roles of others. Employers are expected to interact with employees in a certain way, as are doctors with patients. In each case, actions are (A)[restricted / recognized] by the role responsibilities and obligations associated with individuals' positions within society. For instance, parents and children are linked by certain rights, privileges, and obligations. Parents are responsible for providing their children with the basic necessities of life - food, clothing, shelter, and so forth. These expectations are so powerful that not meeting them may make the parents (B)[valuable / vulnerable] to charges of negligence or abuse. Children, in turn, are expected to do as their parents say. Thus, interactions within a relationship are functions not only of the individual personalities of the people involved but also of the role requirements (C)[associated / disassociated] with the statuses they have.

It has done that, but it has also inspired us to build barriers. When (A)faced with perceived threats - the financial crisis, terrorism, violent conflict, refugees and immigration, the increasing gap between rich and poor - people cling more tightly to their groups. One founder of a famous social media company believed social media would unite us. In some respects it has, but it has simultaneously given voice and organizational ability to new cyber tribes, some of (B)them spend their time (C)spreading blame and division across the World Wide Web. But this narrow perspective misses the opportunity to study the other, more significant geological forces that created what are actually two very similar mountains, one 10,300 feet high and the other 10,900 feet.

Focusing on the differences among societies conceals a deeper reality: their similarities are greater and more profound than their dissimilarities. (A) Imagine studying two hills while standing on a ten-thousand-foot-high plateau. (B) Seen from your perspective, one hill appears to be three hundred feet high, and the other appears to be nine hundred feet. (C) This difference may seem large, and you might focus your attention on what local forces, such as erosion, account for the difference in size. Back in 1996, an American airline was faced with an interesting problem. At a time when most other airlines were losing money or going under, over 100 cities were begging the company to service their locations. However, that's not the interesting part. What's interesting is that the company turned down over 95 percent of those offers and began serving only four new locations. It turned down tremendous growth because company leadership had set an upper limit for growth. Sure, its executives wanted to grow each year, but they didn't want to grow too much. Unlike other famous companies, they _____, one that could be sustained in the long term. It is important to distinguish between being legally allowed to do something, and actually being able to go and do it. ㉠A law could be passed allowing everyone, if they so wish, to run a mile in two minutes. ㉡That would not, however, increase their effective freedom, because, although allowed to do so, they are physically incapable of it. ㉢Effective freedom means 'the power or capacity to act' and formal freedom means 'the mere absence of interference' in a narrow legalistic sense. ㉣Having a minimum of restrictions and a maximum of possibilities is fine. ㉤But in the real world most people will never have the opportunity either to become all that they are allowed to become, or to need to be restrained from doing everything that is possible for them to do. Their effective freedom depends on actually having the means and ability to do what they choose.

You hear again and again that some of the greatest composers were misunderstood in their own day. Not everyone could ① understand the compositions of Beethoven, Brahms, or Stravinsky in their day. The reason for this initial ② lack of acceptance is unfamiliarity. The musical forms, or ideas expressed within them, were completely ③ new. And yet, this is exactly one of the things that makes them so great. Effective composers have their own ideas. Have you ever seen the classic movie Amadeus? The best defence most species of octopus have is to stay hidden as much as possible and do their own hunting at night.

(A) It was only when they looked again that they saw a medium-sized octopus, with all eight of its arms folded and its two eyes staring upwards to create the illusion. An octopus has a big brain, excellent eyesight and the ability to change colour and pattern, and this one was using these assets to turn itself into a completely different creature.

(B) So to find one in full view in the shallows in daylight was a surprise for two Australian underwater photographers. Actually, what they saw at first was a flounder.

(C) Many more of this species have been found since then, and there are now photographs of octopuses that could be said to be transforming into sea snakes. And while they mimic, they hunt — producing the spectacle of, say, a flounder suddenly developing an octopodian arm, sticking it down a hole and grabbing whatever's hiding there.

A group of psychologists studied individuals with severe mental illness who experienced weekly group music therapy, including singing familiar songs and composing original songs. The results showed that the group music therapy improved the quality of participants' life, with those participating in a greater number of sessions experiencing the greatest benefits. Focusing on singing, another group of psychologists reviewed articles on the efficacy of group singing as a mental health treatment for individuals living with a mental health condition in a community setting. The findings showed that, when people with mental health conditions participated in a choir, their mental health and wellbeing significantly improved. Group singing provided enjoyment, improved emotional states, developed a sense of belonging and enhanced self-confidence.

- ① psychologists expecting the negative effects of music.
- ② good effects of group music activities on the mentally ill.

Why do we have the illusion that cramming for an exam is the best learning strategy? Because we are unable to differentiate between the various sections of our memory. Immediately after reading our textbook or our class notes information is fully present in our mind. It sits in our conscious working memory, in an active form. We feel as if we know it, because it is present in our short-term storage space ... but this short-term section has nothing to do with the long-term memory that we will need in order to recall the same information a few days later. After a few seconds or minutes, working memory already starts disappearing, and after a few days, the effect becomes enormous: _____, memory vanishes. To get information into long-term memory, it is essential to study the material, then test yourself, rather than spend all your time studying.

- ① if you examine what you studied
- ② unless you devote time to studying
- ③ if you repeatedly memorize a new thing
- ④ if working memory is not activated
- ⑤ unless you retest your knowledge

The Zeigarnik effect is commonly referred to as the tendency of the subconscious mind to remind you of _____. Bluma Zeigarnik was a Lithuanian psychologist who wrote in the 1920s about the effects of leaving tasks incomplete. She noticed the effect while watching waiters serve in a restaurant. The waiters would remember an order, however complicated, until the order was complete, but they would later find it difficult to remember the order. Zeigarnik did further studies giving both adults and children puzzles to complete then interrupting them during some of the tasks. The results showed that both adults and children remembered the tasks that hadn't been completed because of the interruptions better than the ones that had been completed.

- ① an unfinished task until it is done
- ② a completed task in spite of any interruption
- ③ a difficult task which you are unable to end
- ④ the number of orders that waiters should remember
- ⑤ a task has been in your subconscious mind for long

According to Marguerite La Caze, fashion contributes to our lives and provides a medium for us to develop and exhibit important social virtues. fashion may be beautiful, innovative, and useful; we can display creativity and good taste in our fashion choices. And in dressing with taste and care, we represent both self-respect and a concern for the pleasure of others. There is no doubt that fashion can be a source of interest and pleasure which links us to each other. That is, fashion provides a sociable aspect along with opportunities to imagine oneself differently - to try on different identities.

In statistics, the law of large numbers describes a situation where having more data is better for making predictions. According to it, the more often an experiment is conducted, the closer the average of the results can be expected to match the true state of the world. For instance, on your first encounter with the game of roulette, you may have beginner's luck after betting on 7. But the more often you repeat this bet, the closer the relative frequency of wins and losses is expected to approach the true chance of winning, meaning that your luck will at some point fade away. Similarly, car insurers collect large amounts of data to figure out the chances that drivers will cause accidents, depending on their age, region, or car brand. Both casinos and insurance industries rely on the law of large numbers to balance individual losses.

- ① Repeated practice helps people to discover hidden rules.
- ② The more data is used, the closer predictions get to the true probability.
- ③ Beginner's luck tend to continue for a long time and influence the outcome.
- ④ Big data should be treated carefully for the purpose of information security.
- ⑤ Business owners need to collect large amounts of data to meet customer demands.

In a single week, the sun delivers more energy to our planet than humanity has used through the burning of coal, oil, and natural gas through all of human history. And the sun will keep shining on our planet for billions of years. Our challenge isn't that we're running out of energy. It's that we have been focused on the wrong source - the small, finite one that we're using up. Indeed, all the coal, natural gas, and oil we use today is just solar energy from millions of years ago, a very tiny part of which was preserved deep underground. Our challenge, and our opportunity, is to learn to efficiently and cheaply use the much more abundant source that is the new energy striking our planet each day from the sun.

- ① to warn running out of energy in our planet.
- ② to introduce the benefits of all fossil fuels we use today.
- ③ to notify the important effects of all kinds of energy on our lives.
- ④ to tell about the usefulness of using solar energy efficiently and cheaply.
- ⑤ to report harmful impact of widespread use of all the energy we use today.

The Barnum Effect is the phenomenon where someone reads or heard something very general but believes that it applies to them. These statements appear to be very personal on the surface but in fact, they are true for many. Human psychology allows us to want to believe things that we can identify with on a personal level and even seek information where it doesn't necessarily exist, filling in the blanks with our imagination for the rest. A related and more general phenomenon is that of subjective validation. Subjective validation occurs when two unrelated or even random events are perceived to be related because a belief, expectation, or hypothesis demands a relationship. For example, while reading a horoscope, people _____. What should not be overlooked is the Barnum effect applies to everyone, but only unsuspecting people eventually become victims in most cases.

Internet activist Eli Pariser noticed how online search algorithms encourage our human tendency to grab hold of everything that confirms the beliefs we already hold, while quietly ignoring information that doesn't match those beliefs. We set up a so-called "(A)filter-bubble" around ourselves, where we are constantly exposed only to that material that we agree with. We are never challenged, never giving ourselves the opportunity to acknowledge the existence of diversity and difference. In the best case, we become naive and sheltered, and in the worst, we become radicalized with extreme views, unable to imagine life outside our particular bubble. The results are disastrous: intellectual isolation and the real distortion that comes with believing that the little world we create for ourselves is the world.

*naive: 세상을 모르는 radicalize: 과격하게 만들다
 distortion: 왜곡

- ① presenting distorted images of the world
- ② choosing to be exposed only to media that reinforce the views that we already have
- ③ information that everyone wants to know
- ④ unbiased information that everyone has the right to know

We'll place our sympathies with someone new. When the conflict arises that is the heart of the story, we will be praying for a different outcome. Consider, for example, how the tale of Cinderella would shift if told from the viewpoint of an evil stepsister. Gone with the Wind is Scarlett O'Hara's story, but what if we were shown the same events from the viewpoint of Rhett Butler or Melanie Wilkes?

- ② It is impossible to trace the historical origins of fairy tales
- ③ A good writer intends his readers to identify with the main character

Although technology has the potential to increase productivity, it can also have a negative impact on productivity. For example, in many office environments workers sit at desks with computers and have access to the internet. They are able to check their personal e-mails and use social media whenever they want to. This can disrupt the workflow and make them less productive. Introducing new technology can also have a negative impact on production when it causes a change to the production process or requires workers to learn a new system. Learning to use new technology can be time consuming and stressful for workers and this can cause a decline in productivity.

The nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries saw destructive outbreaks of cholera, typhoid, and influenza in European cities. Indeed, if you have too much of a stimulant, you will become nervous, find it difficult to sleep, and your memory performance will suffer.
